

Charity Assets Trust

Positive absolute returns with low volatility for charities

During January, the fund price rose by 0.9%. This compared with a fall of 0.3% in the FTSE All-Share Index and a fall of 1.7% in the FTSE Govt All-Stocks Index (both figures are total returns in sterling).

As the world becomes accustomed to the barrage of tweets and directives from President Trump and the assertions of ‘America First’, it is notable that beneath the rhetoric there are encouraging signs that the US economy is already gathering reasonable, if unexceptional, momentum. While the growth rate for the fourth quarter failed to breach the 2% level, it is clear that conditions in the labour market are tightening. December’s data revealed US wage growth of 3% against an inflationary backdrop of 2%. Meanwhile, the equity market remains buoyed by hope of fiscal stimulus and corporation tax cuts, highlighted by the fact that the Dow Jones pushed through 20,000 for the first time, having notably first breached 10,000 back in 1999. The questions as to what Trump means for the dollar, and how the Federal Reserve might respond in terms of raising interest rates with the economy now seemingly firing on three cylinders, are clearly critical to the future direction of markets.

With much talk of the comparisons between Trump and Reagan in terms of the ‘free market/small government’ mantra, the reality is that this new political cycle begins at a very different place than that prevailing under the new Reagan administration. While for example in 1982 US interest rates were 15% and at 8% in real terms, the Trump era begins with real interest rates firmly in the negative and a debt/GDP ratio that has ballooned from one times to closer to four times. Referring back to the unemployment rate, Reagan began with an unemployment rate of 10% whereas it is half that now. Consequently, the easy fixes in terms of relaxing monetary policy and the absence of wage and inflationary pressures are essentially inverted as the Trump administration begins to pull the levers of power.

It is notable that the two main drivers of the fund’s performance were gold and Japanese equities. With the US economy continuing to throw off somewhat mixed signals as regards the pace of growth, the immediate path for a progressive interest rate pattern remains unclear. Some anticipation of rising inflationary pressures in the US was evident in the US index-linked market and we have taken this opportunity to secure some profits on the long-dated positions in the fund. While any upward move in the risk free rate would be a detractor as far as gold is concerned, rising inflationary pressures, not to mention a more unsettled geo-political situation continue to justify gold’s position in the fund. Meanwhile, the prevailing valuations in Japan remain compelling, and the fund’s equity position continues to include financial companies which over the past few months benefited from rising global bond yields, a dynamic which has pressured inflation-linked bond prices.

The overall currency positioning of the fund remains firmly focused on our investors’ base currency of sterling. In those periods where Ruffier has historically deployed foreign currency exposure, the objective has been to add protection to the portfolio rather than speculate on potential currency gains. We continue to see the balance of risk being favourable to the pound and with most major currency blocks not without their own political issues, the Brexit factor appears substantially discounted. Meanwhile the current growth momentum suggests that the UK is by no means at the back of the queue in terms of a potential rate increase.

Please note that the Charity Assets Trust is an unregulated collective investment scheme (UCIS) available only to eligible charities as defined overleaf.
