Positive absolute returns with low volatility for charities

March 2018 Issue 73

During March the fund price declined by 0.9%. This compares with a depreciation of 1.8% in the FTSE All-Share Index and an increase of 2.0% in the FTSE Government All-Stocks Index (both figures are total returns in sterling).

The volatility spasm that hit financial markets in February seemingly petered out as we went into March, although the aura of calm was tellingly superficial. After an elongated period of rising equity markets, coupled with an unnatural absence of volatility, the first quarter of 2018 marked the first negative returns for US equities since 2015. While February's blip was very much a market event provoked by rising US bond yields and a sudden spike in volatility, more recent concerns have been emanating from the 'real world'. Threats from President Trump over trade sanctions against China and the escalation of 'Cold War' tensions between Russia and the West depressed sentiment. In addition, data security issues revealed at Facebook were sufficient to derail the so-called FANGS (Facebook, Amazon, Netflix and Google), stocks that have spearheaded the broader equity market rise for some time.

Beneath the increased gyrations seen in equity markets however, it has been notable that the tensions seen in the bond markets during February eased somewhat in March. Much of the focus around US fiscal management has been upon the corporation tax cuts announced late last year. These tax cuts have been readily digested by the stock market in the form of higher anticipated corporate profits and higher share prices. Meanwhile, the US government's ability, or otherwise, to balance the books has perhaps received far less attention. With some estimates suggesting that total borrowing of up to $1 trillion will be required for 2018 (nearly double that of 2017), it is difficult not to assume that at some point, investors – the purchasers of US debt – will demand a higher return.

The spike in volatility seen in February, has confirmed our long-held view that financial markets have been unduly inflated by the impact of quantitative easing and semi-permanent 'emergency' interest rates. This has had the unintended consequence of unnaturally suppressing market volatility and thus, creating a seemingly virtuous circle of rising markets and low volatility. The volatility spike did not contaminate corporate credit markets but it came close and was, in our view, a seminal event. The term 'credit', itself derived from the word 'belief', lies at the heart of the problem for the overall market structure. Credit, in our view, is mispriced and vulnerable to a correction, as improving western economies induce pressure for upward movements in interest rates. As other market participants increasingly question the underlying price of credit and the assumptions behind it, we have been 'non-believers' for some time and continue to hold a protective position that should benefit.

Given these ongoing structural concerns within financial markets, we continue to maintain a broad asset allocation within a 60:40 structure, with the bias towards protection. The main positive contributors during the month came from long-dated index-linked bonds and out of favour UK pharmaceutical companies, with the main detractors being Japanese financials. While the 'phoney war' has evidently started, it is difficult to pinpoint the exact moment when markets will become more hostile. As such, we will continue to seek value in equity markets but within an overall buttress of protection.

Please note that the Charity Assets Trust is an unregulated collective investment scheme (UCIS) available only to eligible charities as defined overleaf.
