

Ruffer Total Return International

Positive returns with low volatility

During the month, the net asset value fell by 2.0%. This compares with a fall of 1.6% in the FTSE All-Share Index. This is a disappointing return despite November's volatile markets. Global equities were significantly boosted by a relief rally in the closing days of the month, with the S&P 500 posting its best week in seven years to claw its way back into positive territory for the year to date. The fund, however, was largely bypassed by this late recovery, which focused on defensives and technology, rather than the cyclical and value stocks that feature in our portfolio. This was compounded by the sharp fall in the oil price, ending the month down 23%, its worst monthly showing in a decade. These recent shifts in equity markets do not chime with the still strong economic growth that we observe.

The proximate cause for the equity bounce was what is now being termed the 'Fed flinch'. Federal Reserve Chairman Powell backed away from his October comments that interest rates were 'a long way from neutral' and instead decided in November that they were actually now 'just below neutral'. This provided the impetus for the rally in longer duration equities (defensives and technology). Cynics could well infer that interest rates are now being set by President Trump's Twitter account. However we would focus more on the risk of inflation if the Fed is seen as shying away from necessary, though painful interest rate rises.

2018 has turned into an annus horribilis for investors, with almost all major asset classes showing declines in dollar terms. Our own portfolio has not been immune and this led to considerable introspection of our world view and portfolio strategy. Importantly, we are convinced we are in the right place. Markets do not decline in a straight line but it is our impression we have likely seen the top for this market cycle, even if economies remain robust. We expect financial conditions to tighten further in 2019 thus, we have continued to reduce equities, selling some of our long held Japanese financials.

There will be noise around the trends, but protectionism and populism are here to stay. We added to portfolio protections this month, particularly long dated US TIPS. These are priced for around 2% or less inflation for the next 30 years. In a hugely indebted world with rising deficits, unfunded liabilities and electorates agitating for higher wages and government spending this seems the wrong price to us. Despite the bruises from recent performance, we remain resolutely optimistic about the prospects for our unconventional protections, particularly those against credit markets which we see as highly distorted and likely to fall in dislocative fashion. These are expensive to carry but we hope they will keep you safe.
