An alternative to alternative asset management

During January the Company's net asset value (NAV) rose by 1.2%. This compares with a decline of 0.3% in the FTSE All-Share Total Return Index.

As is the case every year, 2017 began with a blizzard of forecasts and global prognostications from analysts, strategists and others of the now derided class formerly known as 'experts'. Many of the same boffins who were confidently forecasting President Trump as a left tail event and a negative market shock just six months ago are now equally confident in anticipating a mini-boom in GDP fired by his policies of deregulation and tax-cuts. Given the heat and noise of the political and moral debate, never has the Buffetism been truer that forecasts usually tell us more of the forecaster than of the future.

Whilst investors have reacted positively over the last couple of months, we are, we think, reaching a point where the market will require proof of success before advancing much further. Accordingly our principal activity in January was to cut back equity exposure to about 38% of net assets, taking profits in a range of stocks including Qualcomm, Microsoft, Conviviality Retail and Oracle. This leaves us going into the uncertainties of 2017 with, we hope, approximately the right balance between fear and greed in the portfolio. In the fear corner we have index-linked bonds and some gold, to protect not only against inflation and negative real interest rates, but also standing guard against surprise economic weakness, should Trump misfire. In the greed camp the equities are now turned toward cyclical and financials, so as to benefit, should the current more positive growth environment persist, bringing with it the threat of higher interest rates.

Looking back to the events of last year, and their likely influence on markets in 2017, we are reminded of a quotation from the unlikely source of Vladimir Lenin: 'There are decades where nothing happens; and there are weeks where decades happen.' Will history show that Brexit or Trump were such moments in time? If one looks through a long enough lens, the period since 2009 feels like a single chapter in history. These post crisis years were defined by a faltering sense of recovery, a dwindling of confidence in the competency and integrity of the establishment and surprisingly strong asset returns spurred on by super low interest rates. The latter point ensured that wealth and inter-generational inequality widened leading to dissatisfaction with the status quo. Asset owners benefited and those whose only asset was their labour did not. The game is rigged, they sensed, and to some extent, it was.

The political context changed last year and we must recognise this. The second half of 2016 was the beginning of a new chapter as yet unwritten and the longer electorates see that rebellion does not result in the threatened economic calamity, the more emboldened they will be to depose those in power. For now, markets are still (just) reacting positively to the policy proposals emerging from the Trump camp. However, the pandemic themes of nationalism, de-globalisation and soaking the rich are hardly a positive environment for savers and investors. Asset prices have benefited from the Goldilocks scenario of a little growth, benign inflation and unprecedentedly low interest rates. If inflation and growth improve then interest rates would have to rise, thereby tightening financial conditions. Counterintuitively, history tells us that strong growth can be bad for the stock market when coupled with either higher inflation or higher interest rates. Investors should be careful what they wish for.
