Ruffer Investment Company Limited

An alternative to alternative asset management

During March, the net asset value of the Company fell by 1.1% after allowing for the payment of an interim dividend of 0.9p per share. This compares with a fall of 1.8% in the FTSE All-Share Index.

The main news flow during the month related to good old-fashioned geopolitical tensions. Although diplomatic relations between the West and Russia had little impact on markets, the risk of President Trump's tariff chatter becoming a reality did have a meaningful impact as the possibility of trade wars became more likely. Technology stocks also suffered, led by Facebook as the company came under scrutiny for the (mis)use of customer data.

Perhaps the most significant feature of financial markets in both February and March has been the scarcity of hiding places. Traditional safe-havens, which usually rise in value during times of equity market stress, failed to perform. In sterling terms, gold, gilts, treasuries, the dollar and the Swiss franc have all fallen in value since the start of the year. For most of the last quarter of a century (the career span of most fund managers) simply holding a portfolio of equities and bonds has worked well (with a couple of notable exceptions). The promise of central bank support has encouraged and sustained rises in asset prices, whilst at times of distress, negative bond-equity correlation ensured a diversified portfolio of equities and bonds held up reasonably well. More recently however, zero (and negative) interest rates have suppressed yields whilst also driving up equity values. This has resulted in a significant increase in the correlation between equities and bonds, which has substantially reduced the effectiveness of traditional offsetting assets. For this reason, we have stressed the importance of some of the more esoteric parts of the portfolio, principally the option exposure and credit default swaps held via our illiquid vehicle. This is a small part of the total but it is potent. We think that recent correlation is here to stay and, if we are right, then these unconventional protections will have an important role to play. The question then is why, in a month when the market has fallen, have we also posted a negative return (albeit with the blow slightly cushioned)? The answer: our option exposure is positioned to protect from large market moves not bumps in the road. The latter would likely result in a zero-sum game or worse, and we prefer to focus on what we fear will be the significant inflection points.

Where do we go from here? The bulls will view the 7% fall in global equities in the last ten weeks as a bump in the road. The bears fall into two camps. On the one hand, this is the late stage of the economic cycle and recent growth will tail off leaving valuations looking unjustifiably high. On the other, the combination of recent fiscal stimulus on top of an overheating US economy will lead to a spike in inflation and bond yields, undermining the argument that high valuations in equities can be justified by interminably low interest rates. On balance, we would fall into the latter camp, yet remain cognisant of the fact that economic growth could remain robust. In this case, we want our equities to benefit and hence the bias towards cyclical stocks. In the very short-term, the summary of Nick Carn of Carn Macro Advisors seems apt: markets will continue to behave in a way that disappoints the bulls and frustrates the bears. After February's sell-off (on seemingly good economic news), we should all be careful what we wish for.
