Ruffer Investment Company Limited

An alternative to alternative asset management

During May, the net asset value of the Company rose by 1.3%. This compares with a rise of 2.8% in the FTSE All-Share index.

The two largest drivers of returns in May were UK equities and oil-related stocks. We have previously discussed the prospect that UK equities, both domestic and international businesses, presented opportunities as global investors have given them a wide berth. The combination of improving (or not deteriorating) UK economic data and the Bank of England not opting to raise interest rates helped during the month. Positions in Royal Dutch Shell, some oil services companies and Exxon, where we have recently increased exposure, benefitted from rising oil prices. Elsewhere, Ocado (0.7% of the fund at the beginning of the month) signed a transformational deal with US grocer Kroger, which resulted in a rise of 67% in the share price.

Global equity markets have continued to recover their poise, aside from a brief wobble as the Italian president threatened to set off a constitutional crisis. The combination of benign economic conditions, improving corporate earnings and the presumption that policy makers remain on standby to support asset markets has seen global equities bounce back. Whilst February's sharp fall in equity markets appeared to come out of blue skies, and contagion did not spread to most other asset classes, developed market equities currently appear to be ignoring clouds forming on the horizon. Rising oil prices, higher bond yields, a resurgent US dollar and sclerotic politics have started to impact broader markets even if equities have shown few signs of stress. During May, both Turkey and Argentina had to raise interest rates sharply to prevent a run on their currencies. Talk of trade wars between the US and China and signs of increased funding stress in US money markets are further signs that all is not well. Whilst we offer no insight into the machinations of Italian politics it is difficult not to draw attention to Paolo Savona, the staunch Eurosceptic who was deemed unsuitable to be Finance Minister but well suited to the role of Minister of European Affairs. As these events unfolded, Italian bonds lost 6.7% in capital terms; quite stark for what had hitherto been presumed to be close to risk-free thanks to European Central Bank (ECB) support. Intriguingly, the populists now in power have mooted the possibility of a de facto parallel currency (so-called 'mini-BoTs') being used alongside the euro as a back door way of stimulating the Italian economy without increasing national debt. The bearer notes would be euro denominated and therefore abide by the ECB's rules and would be linked to future tax receipts. The idea has been tried before in Argentina, California and was famously put forward by the Greek government in 2015. However, those schemes did not use bearer securities, which are harder to regulate and tax than electronic payment methods. This has set the proverbial cat among the pigeons at the ECB, as such extreme bending of the rules carries clear inflationary risks and poses a threat to the very concept of the single currency.

Overall, the calm markets of 2017, which saw both bond and stock prices drift gently upwards on a monthly basis, seem firmly behind us. The prospect of rising geopolitical risks and central bankers showing determination to introduce more volatility into financial markets make for dangerous times ahead.
