

Charity Assets Trust

Positive absolute returns with low volatility for charities

During March, the fund price fell by 0.3%. This compared with a rise of 1.2% in the FTSE All-Share Index and a rise of 0.3% in the FTSE Govt All-Stocks Index (both figures are total returns in sterling).

Having peaked at the start of the month, equity markets drifted lower in March as investors began to take a more circumspect view of the likely economic impact of the Trump juggernaut, with the phrase 'Trump bump' increasingly entering the lexicon. Meanwhile, the Federal Reserve increased interest rates by 0.25% to mark the third increase since the financial crisis, although notably struck a measured tone as to the impact of any potential Trump initiatives; the assumption remains that economic growth will be around 2%, below the 3%+ rates desired by the Trump administration. To quote Mrs Yellen, 'We haven't changed the outlook. We think we're moving on the same course we've been on'.

Perhaps not surprisingly, the euphoria as to the 'reflation' trade paused during the month. Three quarters into the new president's first 100 days and we have already witnessed the early abandonment of the much-heralded healthcare reforms, while the timing and extent of any fiscal stimulus remains unclear and at best unlikely until 2018. Meanwhile, surveys of expected economic activity continue to surprise on the upside, indicating that growth might be nearer the top-end of the range anticipated by the Federal Reserve, if not the more supercharged range assumed by the Trump optimists. For bond markets, however, this 'not too hot/not too cold' scenario eased the immediate upward pressure on bond yields witnessed in the fourth quarter of last year, leaving the portfolio's index-linked bonds positive for the month.

It was notable that while the US is in 'tightening' mode as far as interest rates are concerned, Mr Kuroda at the Bank of Japan was quick to emphasise that this does not mean that Japan would be adjusting its policy and following suit. He also confirmed that quantitative easing, long since tapered by the Federal Reserve, would remain on tap even after Japan reaches its 2% inflation target and that economic 'momentum' was the key goal for the Japanese economy. The unique characteristics of the Japanese economic cycle relative to other major economies, coupled with equity valuations that often reflect discounts relative to asset values, continue to offer attractions at a time when western markets remain at historical highs and face the headwind of a tightening in monetary policy. In addition, Japanese financial stocks remain attractive as beneficiaries of the Bank of Japan's focus on steepening the yield curve, while in a broader portfolio context, they sit in juxtaposition to our index-linked bond exposure which will not be immune to upward global yield pressure.

The fund remains positioned to benefit should the recent positive global economic survey data prove to be a reliable indicator of further momentum within the global economy. Reflecting this, positive contributions were seen from the fund's US technology exposure as well as a position in the US housing sector. Nonetheless, protective assets in the form of index-linked exposure and a bias towards cyclical value rather than economically insensitive 'higher yield' equities remain at the heart of our positioning. The timeline and scale of Trump's fiscal push is currently unknowable but it is difficult to ignore the populist pressures facing global western governments. We have already seen this change in the political cycle manifest itself in a rapidly withdrawn mega-bid for Unilever by Kraft and this is likely to have broad implications for equities. Equally, the fiscal levers will continue to represent a temptation for politicians, leaving conventional bonds exposed as the interest rate cycle turns in western economies.

Please note that the Charity Assets Trust is an unregulated collective investment scheme (UCIS) available only to eligible charities as defined overleaf.
