

LF Ruffer Absolute Return Fund

Positive absolute returns with low volatility

The price of the C accumulation shares of the LF Ruffer Absolute Return Fund fell by 2.1% during October, compared with a decline of 5.2% in the FTSE All-Share Index and a rise of 0.9% in the FTSE All Stocks Index.

Eight months on from February's volatility shock, October served to remind investors that risk assets are so called for a reason. Despite a recovery at the end of the month global equities fell by nearly 6% in October and what was notable this time was that the technology giants, which have dominated equity markets this year, led the fall, with the share prices of companies such as Amazon and Netflix down over 20% from their recent highs.

As so often happens after such a drop in equity values, various explanations are proposed. Our overriding concern over the last year or so, and the main driver of our cautious equity allocation, has been that the coming change in central bank policy would not be a smooth one. Monetary tightening from the US Federal Reserve and later this year the tapering of asset purchases by the European Central Bank, will unsettle markets after nine years of monetary largesse. Moreover with the US economy strong, and wage growth there responding to the lowest unemployment levels since 1969, we strongly believe the Fed is likely to need a substantial market fall, or economic slump, before contemplating a change of course, whatever the views of the present incumbent of the White House. To our eyes it is fanciful to expect mid-single digit drops in equities even to feature on the Fed's radar. Higher US interest rates, now at 2.25%, are only one side of this story of reduced liquidity, with quantitative tightening now running at $50bn per month as the Fed seeks to shrink its balance sheet.

We obviously do not know whether the present turbulence will blow over or if it is a prelude to a more substantial fall in equity markets. Alongside this removal of liquidity, concerns are growing as to whether the economic and profit cycles are approaching their peak, and trade wars, Brexit and Italian budget discussions continue to hover in the background. However, the resumption of share buybacks in the US may provide support to equity markets, and last month saw the announcement of further fiscal stimulus from China, this time in the form of income tax cuts. Following last month's decline and February's fall, the more episodes we have like this, the greater the risk of a significant downturn and the people who have previously bought the dips, feeling less inclined to do so.

In that context we are not minded to increase our equity weighting on the back of these falls. We maintain around 40% in equities alongside the portfolio's unconventional protections, gold and index-linked bonds, which we hope will offset losses and produce positive total returns even if the equity environment were to worsen from here.

The fund's prospectus and key investor information documents are provided in English and available on request or from www.ruffer.co.uk. Please note that LF Ruffer Absolute Return Fund is a UK UCITS and is not registered for distribution in any country other than the UK. In line with the Prospectus, it is possible that at any one time the LF Ruffer Absolute Return Fund may invest more than 35% of its assets in transferable securities issued or guaranteed by an EEA state, one or more local authorities, a third country or a public international body to which one or more EEA States belong. The only aforementioned securities where Ruffer would currently consider holding more than 35% would be UK or US government issued transferable securities.

Investment objective

The fund aims to achieve low volatility and positive returns in all market conditions from an actively managed portfolio of equities or equity related securities (including convertibles), corporate and government bonds and currencies. Capital invested is at risk and there is no guarantee that a positive return will be delivered over any one or a number of twelve-month periods. The fund may also invest in collective investment schemes, cash, money market instruments and derivatives and forward transactions. Pervading this objective is a fundamental philosophy of capital preservation. In selecting investments the fund will adopt a stock picking approach and will not adopt any investment weightings by reference to any benchmark.
