

LF Ruffer Absolute Return Fund

Positive absolute returns with low volatility

During June the fund price declined by 1.9%. This compared with a rise of 0.2% in the FTSE All-Share Index, and a rise of 0.7% in the FTSE Govt All Stocks Index (all figures are total returns in sterling).

The June meeting of the US Federal Reserve was always going to be closely watched. With the US economy continuing to re-open, US employment levels recovering, and inflationary pressures rising, investors were on the lookout for any change from the Fed's hitherto very accommodative stance. Market action in response to the meeting confirmed investors' faith in the omnipotence and omniscience of central banks remains undimmed. The Fed's commentary fully acknowledged recent surging inflation prints, nascent wage growth and increasing bottlenecks. This prompted short-term bond yields to rise, confirming US interest rates might begin to rise slightly sooner than originally thought. The fact long bond yields actually fell after the meeting, suggests markets have totally bought the Fed view the present inflationary pressures will be merely transitory, and only the slightest tap of the brakes should be necessary to bring everything back under control.

These dynamics were undeniably unhelpful for the portfolio in the later part of June. The decline in long bond yields took the wind out of the sails of the portfolio's cyclical and financial equities. The rising US dollar, reflecting the slight change in interest rate expectations, hobbled gold, while the feeling all would be 'right on the inflation night' caused breakevens to fall.

We continue to believe growth expectations in the eurozone are underpriced, and less exuberant growth in the US can thus be compensated elsewhere. We are also sceptical of the view of inflation as transitory. Our reasons for this view have been well rehearsed on prior occasions, but recovering wage growth, eye-watering government spending the world over, fractured supply chains and the fact not all capacity will return post-pandemic are only a few. However we are not bullet-headed. We have always said the road to the inflationary end game would encompass many diversions, and have its bumpy moments when our views might look well offside. To protect against such discomforts, we have increased the portfolio's US dollar exposure on a tactical basis and trimmed the gold bullion position. If there is one indicator the deflation trade is intact it is that the US dollar should be declining. Thus as we watch the economic data in the coming months, a higher exposure to the US currency, even if only on a short-term basis, seems to us an entirely appropriate way of expressing our long-held aspiration to be approximately right rather than exactly wrong.

Ruffer performance is shown after deduction of all fees and management charges, and on the basis of income being reinvested. Past performance is not a guide to future performance. The value of the shares and the income from them can go down as well as up and you may not get back the full amount originally invested. The value of overseas investments will be influenced by the rate of exchange.

Investment objective

The fund aims to achieve low volatility and positive returns in all market conditions from an actively managed portfolio of equities or equity related securities (including convertibles), corporate and government bonds and currencies. Capital invested is at risk and there is no guarantee that a positive return will be delivered over any one or a number of twelve-month periods. The fund may also invest in collective investment schemes, cash, money market instruments and derivatives and forward transactions. Pervading this objective is a fundamental philosophy of capital preservation. In selecting investments the fund will adopt a stock picking approach and will not adopt any investment weightings by reference to any benchmark.
