Ruffer Total Return International

Positive returns with low volatility

During November the fund price fell by 1.0%. This compares with a fall of 1.6% in the FTSE All-Share Index and a decline of 1.3% in the FTSE All-Stocks Index (both figures total returns in sterling).

This month's commentary focuses less on Donald Trump's unexpected victory in the US presidential election, but rather on the stress test posed to our portfolio by the subsequent market moves . In what seems a dress rehearsal for a future inflation-driven move in asset prices, we have seen a significant repricing (ie sell-off) across global bonds. Yields have spiked higher on the prospect of fiscal stimulus under President-elect Trump, with the benchmark US 10 year bond yield leaping from 1.8% pre-election to 2.4%. This has triggered a reversal of the prevailing mood within equity markets, where supposedly safe 'bond-like' equities have sold off sharply, with investors rotating into more cyclical/value stocks and financials.

Despite registering a small loss for the month, we feel the portfolio has passed this 'stress test' if not with flying colours, then at least satisfactorily. We aim to build an 'all weather' portfolio that not only protects investors from the painful consequences of events we can foresee, but is also sufficiently robust to withstand shorter term movements that could blow us off course. Our long term compass is firmly set to inflation and negative real interest rates, and therefore we cherish the portfolio's long-dated index-linked bonds. Having performed so well for us already this year, we have been acutely aware that a sharp rise in bond yields could reverse the strong performance of the portfolio.

Trump's election victory has delivered just such a shock to investors, even if we see it as simply another step on the path towards inflation. As bond yields spiked higher, and with investors unable as yet to truly distinguish between real and nominal interest rates, our index-linked bonds have fallen back sharply. We have weathered this setback thanks to the offsets built up in the rest of the portfolio. Interest rate options are part of this armoury, and have performed well, but it is Japanese financials that have shone as offsets to falling bond prices. Japanese banks and life assurers made double digit gains in November, with one of our largest holdings, MUFJ, up over 20%.

Having long purged the portfolio of 'bond-like' equities we were largely immune to the sell-off in this area, whilst our positioning in cyclical equities has been rewarded with gains from stocks such as Tenaris, Ingevity and WestRock. Thus, despite the longest dated index-linked bond in the portfolio falling by 17% from its October high (with shorter durations following suit), the fund price has barely moved, thereby preserving the double digit gains for the overall portfolio so far this year.

Trump's election marks the end of omnipotent central banks and the pre-eminence of monetary policy, with politics now taking central stage. Fiscal expansion seems more likely to herald inflation than a surge in real growth. However, such tectonic shifts occur slowly, so we repeat our suggestion that November's market moves are merely a dress rehearsal for a far greater shift in asset prices in the future.
