

CF Ruffer Equity & General Fund

An actively-managed fund emphasising absolute growth with diversity of risk

March 2016 Issue 160

During the month the fund's O accumulation shares increased by 2.8%. This compared with a rise of 1.9% in the FTSE All-Share Total Return Index.

In March we visited the US meeting many different companies. If the US were isolated and not part of the global ecosystem, it is probable that the Fed would have raised interest rates much higher by now. The US economy has been doing fine, but most corporates do not like the strength of the dollar and many management teams find the global macro confusing – Mr Munger's words are as wise as ever 'if you are not confused, you do not understand'. Most recently central banks seem to have acted in a co-ordinated manner to avoid further strengthening of the dollar. Thus, the building up of deflationary forces has abated (for now) and the stock market has been strong. At the same time though, the banking system is 'wounded', particularly in Europe. Negative rates are eroding the earnings power of banks and most financial stocks have been very poor. The current market equilibrium is not based on solid ground, the odds for high volatility and the appearance of extreme events (macro but also micro) are high – this is the result of very low interest rates for so long.

During the last few days as the markets have rallied, we have been selectively reducing our equities: for example, commodity related positions such as Glencore. We also cut News Corp and took profits in Thomson Reuters after the strong appreciation of its shares during the month. Hence, our cash balance has increased to c 35%. We are looking intensely into new investment ideas – we are currently keen on special situations with asymmetry in risk-reward and/or inexpensive yield. Thus, we have been buying Novartis. In the US market, the 'bond proxy' stocks have consistently performed very well and hence the shares of Johnson & Johnson (among others) are at all-time high. On the other hand, it is surprising that in Europe with continuous aggressive quantitative easing and negative rates, Novartis, a Swiss based multinational with stable cash flows, has de-rated significantly recently. Similar to Johnson & Johnson, which is the oldest conglomerate in healthcare (comprising of three units: pharmaceuticals, medical devices and consumer), Novartis manages a portfolio of a) the key pharma unit, b) Sandoz which specialises in generics and c) Alcon, a leader in ophthalmology. The market has been disappointed because Entresto, a new drug with potential to become a blockbuster, is exhibiting lower growth than expected. In addition, Alcon is performing poorly. We have followed and owned Novartis in the past, after it bought Alcon from Nestle just before the financial crisis. Alcon used to be a crown jewel and Novartis certainly paid a very high price for it. However, during the last few years under the corporate umbrella, the focus on innovation declined and most recently Alcon's growth has stalled. An experienced new CEO has just been hired. Over time it is likely that better management with more focus on investing will rejuvenate this strong franchise. Otherwise, it could be argued that if performance does not improve, Novartis's portfolio units could always be run better by different owners; in the meantime Novartis is paying c 4% annually to the patient shareholders.

Investment objective

The fund aims to provide capital growth by investing in a diversified global portfolio of predominantly equities. The fund is actively managed, and is not constrained by any requirement to track indices or conform to investment fashion.
