

CF Ruffer Total Return Fund

Positive absolute returns with low volatility

During November the fund price rose by 0.2%. This compares with a fall of 1.7% for the FTSE All-Share Index and a rise of 0.3% for the FTSE All-Stocks Index (all figures total returns in sterling).

November marked the thirteenth positive month in a row for the US equity market, the longest such period on record. However, away from the US, equity market performance was more variable than it has been for much of this record run. Japanese equities again took star billing as Prime Minister Abe's re-election in October was further supported by continued positive economic momentum. Absent the bellicose commentary from North Korea, Japan represents one of the few developed market economies with any real claim to political stability, with the Bank of Japan currently appearing to be the central bank furthest from beginning to exit its post financial crisis policies. These factors combine to give us comfort that the Japanese equity market remains the most rewarding arena in which to take on market risk. Elsewhere, European equities suffered against the backdrop of increased political uncertainty and the pressures of a strong currency.

The fund received positive contributions from a number of our individual stock selections during the month. We have always argued that stock selection is a key part of our armoury and it is pleasing that this has borne fruit more recently. Having spent 15 years optimising a solution for delivering groceries profitably to customers' doors, Ocado, (admittedly a relatively small position), announced a potentially landmark deal with French supermarket chain Casino, causing the shares to surge by over 30% in the last three days of the month. Sony (+16% in November) produced a stand-out set of numbers, which even forced the usually conservative management to upgrade their forecasts for the current year. As well as being a world-leading electronics business, the company has assets in the shape of music and other content which could continue to drive significant growth within the business. The last name to highlight is a recent purchase: Foot Locker. This US retailer rose 40% after releasing its latest quarterly results, which demonstrated that the business was not declining as quickly as the market had feared. Whilst 'one swallow does not a summer make', virtually no weight is currently given to the possibility of a consumer-led acceleration at this stage of the US economic cycle, but this alone could lead to interest rates having to rise more quickly than the market believes. Given the support low rates have given to most asset markets, some degree of circumspection is warranted.

As we moved into December, the US Senate voted to pass the sweeping tax reforms proposed by Donald Trump and the Republican party. Prior to the formal announcement, banks and other financial stocks rose on the hopes of looser regulation, whilst many of the best performing sectors (technology and staples) went into reverse. The prospect of further economic momentum and the potential for steepening yield curves should benefit the fund's equity holdings whilst potentially posing a threat to many of the trades that have led markets this year. Our avoidance of the latter is in part responsible for the relatively dull performance over the last twelve months; we have eschewed the fastest-flowing parts of the stream for fear that they could be at the centre of any subsequent falls.

The fund's prospectus and key investor information documents are provided in English and available on request or from www.ruffer.co.uk. Please note that CF Ruffer Investment Funds is a UK UCITS. The CF Ruffer Total Return Fund is not registered for distribution in any country other than the UK. In line with the Prospectus, it is possible that at any one time the CF Ruffer Total Return Fund may invest more than 35% of its assets in transferable securities issued or guaranteed by an EEA state, one or more local authorities, a third country or a public international body to which one or more EEA States belong. The only aforementioned securities where Ruffer would currently consider holding more than 35% would be UK or US government issued transferable securities.

Investment objective

The fund aims to achieve low volatility, positive returns from an actively managed portfolio of different asset classes, including equities, bonds and currencies. Capital invested is at risk and there is no guarantee that a positive return will be delivered over any one or a number of twelve-month periods. The fund may also invest in collective investment schemes, cash, money market instruments, other transferable securities and derivatives and forward transactions. Pervading this objective is a fundamental philosophy of capital preservation.
